Agile for Our Planetary-Level Challenges

Topics	To Discuss	Discussing	Done Discussing
Ally: Who do we need to invite to be allies with us? Our Best: As leaders, what do we think has to be for that would be helpful for planetary-level challenges? Agency: What are the powers I have to do something about these challenges? Community: What part of these challenges could we do something about together? Relationship: What is the nature of your relationship with our planetary-level challenges? Source: What is your source about planetary challenges? What is your compelling story for doing something?	Start with this story: Personal perspective: What do you see, hear, feel when you think about planetary-level challenges?

Insights/Actions

[Empty space for notes]

start here

This is a conversation starter about a really tough subject...

our planetary-level challenges

By using it, we hope you:

- Gain insights as you listen to others share.
- Make room for the emotions and reactions that will come up.
- Tap into your collective creativity to generate ideas.
- See if and how you want to take action, individually and together.

What is a planetary-level challenge, anyway?

Planetary-level challenges are the ones that affect us all. Or, at least, a lot of us. They are big...really, really big. They don't care about nations, borders, politics. To "solve" them, or at least minimize their impact, they require all of us to pitch in together. Some examples: climate change, biodiversity loss, poverty, inequality, economic sustainability, pandemics, etc.

Planetary-level challenges are wicked problems.

A wicked problem is multi dimensional • has multiple stakeholders • has multiple causes • has multiple symptoms • has multiple solutions • and is constantly evolving. A wicked problem spans across organizations and worlds. It cannot be solved by one team and will take many to solve. And it may not be "solved" in our lifetime.

A wicked problem is tailor made for Agile collaboration, experimentation and adaptation across our worldwide Agile community.

We're glad you're here and we hope you have an eye-opening conversation.
